Doris Lessing (1919-)

Doris Lessing is a British writer, born in Persia. In 1924 her family moved to Rhodesia to farm there. She began to write while living in Rhodesia but did not become a professional author until after moving to Britain in 1949. Many of her novels and stories are based on her experience of Southern Africa and its racial problems. One of the best known is `The Grass is Singing' (1950). She is also interested in exploring relationships between men and women and the life of independent women in contemporary western society. Her novels also include `The Golden Notebook' (1962), the `Children of Violence' series (1952-69), 'Briefing for a Descent into hell' (1971) and `The Summer Before the Dark' (1973). She has written a number of short stories which appear in the following collections: 'Five' (1953), 'African Stories' (1964), 'The Story of a Non-Marrying Man' (1972) and `The Habit of Loving' (1957), from which `Through the Tunnel' is taken.

The story

Jerry is on holiday abroad with his widowed mother. He meets a group of local youths, older than himself. He becomes obsessed with the need to be more like them and his desire takes the form of a trial of endurance - swimming through an underwater tunnel. The tunnel is long and dangerous; if he fails he will certainly drown.

Through the Tunnel

Going to the shore on the first morning of the holiday, the young English boy stopped at a turning of the path and looked down at a wild and rocky bay,* and then over to the crowded beach he knew so well from other years. His mother walked on in front of him, carrying a bright-striped bag in one hand. 1- ler other arm, swinging loose, was very white in the sun. The boy watched that white, naked arm, and turned his eyes, which had a frown behind them, toward the bay and back again to his mother. When she felt he was not with her, she swung around. `Oh, there you are, Jerry!' she said. She looked impatient, then smiled. `Why, darling, would you rather not come with me? Would you rather-' She frowned, conscientiously worrying over what amusements he might secretly be longing for which she had been too busy or too careless to imagine. He was very familiar with that anxious, apologetic smile. Contrition* sent him running after her. And yet, as he ran, he looked back over his shoulder at the wild hay; and all morning, as he played on the safe beach, he was thinking of it.

Next morning, when it was time for the routine of swimming and sunbathing, his mother said, `Are you tired of the usual beach, Jerry? Would you like to go somewhere else?'
‘Oh, no!’ he said quickly, smiling at her out of that unfailing impulse of contrition - a sort of chivalry. Yet, walking down the path with her, he blurted out, ‘I’d like to go and have a look at those rocks down there.’

She gave the idea her attention. It was a wild-looking place, and there was no one there, but she said, ‘Of course, Jerry. When you’ve had enough come to the big beach. Or just go straight back to the villa, if you like.’ She walked away, that bare arm, now slightly reddened from yesterday’s sun, swinging. And he almost ran after her again, feeling it unbearable that she should go by herself, but he did not.

She was thinking. Of course he’s old enough to be safe without me. Have I been keeping him too close? He mustn’t feel he ought to be with me. I must be careful. He was an only child, eleven years old. She was a widow. She was determined to be neither possessive nor lacking in devotion.* She went worrying off to her beach.

As for Jerry, once he saw that his mother had gained her beach, he began the steep descent to the bay. From where he was, high up among red-brown rocks, it was a scoop of moving bluish green fringed with white. As he went lower, he saw that it spread among small promontories and inlets of rough, sharp rock, and the crisping, lapping surface showed stains of purple and darker blue. Finally, as he ran sliding and scraping down the last few yards, he saw an edge of white surf, and the shallow, luminous movement of water over white sand, and, beyond that, a solid, heavy blue.

He ran straight into the water and began swimming. He was a good swimmer. He went out fast over the gleaming sand, over a middle region where rocks lay like discoloured monsters under the surface, and then he was in the real sea - a warm sea where irregular cold currents from the deep water shocked his limbs.

When he was so far out that he could look back not only on the little bay but past the promontory that was between it and the big beach, he floated on the buoyant surface and looked for his mother. There she was, a speck of yellow under an umbrella that looked like a slice of orange peel. He swam back to shore, relieved at being sure she was there, but all at once very lonely.

On the edge of a small cape that marked the side of the bay away from the promontory was a loose scatter of rocks. Above them, some boys were stripping off their clothes. They came running, naked, down to the rocks. The English boy swam towards them, and kept his distance at a stone’s throw.* They were of that coast, all of them burned smooth dark brown, and speaking a language he did not understand. To be with them, of them, was a craving* that filled his whole body. He swam a little closer; they turned and watched him with narrowed, alert dark eyes. Then one smiled and waved. It was enough. In a minute, he had swum in and was on the rocks beside them, smiling with a desperate, nervous supplication.* They shouted cheerful greetings at him, and then, as he preserved his nervous, uncomprehending smile, they understood that he was a foreigner strayed from his own beach, and they proceeded to forget him. But he was happy. He was with them.

They began diving again and again from a high point into a well of blue sea between rough, pointed rocks. After they had dived and come up, they swam around, hauled themselves up, and waited their turn to dive again. They were big boys - men to Jerry. He dived, and they watched him, and when he swam around to take his place, they made way for him. He felt he was accepted, and he dived again, carefully, proud of himself.

Soon the biggest of the boys poised* himself, shot down into the water, and did not come up. The others stood about, watching. Jerry, after waiting for the sleek brown head to appear, let out a yell of warning; they looked at him idly and turned their eyes back towards the water. After a long time, the boy carne up on the other side of a big dark rock, letting the air out of his lungs in a spluttering gasp and a shout of triumph. Immediately, the rest of them dived in. One moment, the morning seemed full of chattering boys; the next, the air and the surface of the water were empty. But through the heavy blue, dark shapes could be seen moving and groping.*

Jerry dived, shot past the school* of underwater swimmers, saw a black wall of rock looming at him, touched it, and bobbed up at once to the surface, where the wall was a low barrier he could see across. There was no one visible; under him, in the water, the dim shapes of the swimmers had- disappeared. Then one, and then another of the boys carne up on the far side of the barrier of rock, and he understood that they had swum through some gap or hole in it. He plunged down again. He could see nothing through the stinging* salt water but the blank rock. When he carne up, the boys were all on the diving rock, preparing to attempt the feat* again. And now, in a panic of failure, he yelled up, in English, 'Look at me! Look!' and he began splashing and kicking in the water like a foolish dog.

They looked down gravely, frowning. He knew the frown. At moments of failure, when he clowned to claim his mother's attention, it was with just this grave, embarrassed inspection that she rewarded him. Through his hot shame, feeling the pleading grin on his face like a scar that he could never remove, he looked up at the group of big brown boys on the rock and shouted, Bonjour! Merci! Au revoir! Monsieur, monsieur!* while he hooked his fingers round his ears and waggled* them.

Water surged into his mouth ; he choked, sank, carne up. The rock, lately weighed with boys, seemed to rear up out of the water as their weight was removed. They were flying down past him, now, into the water; the air was full of falling bodies. Then the rock was empty in the hot sunlight. He counted one, two, three . . . .

At fifty, he was terrified. They must all be drowning beneath him, in the watery caves of the rock! At a hundred, he stared around him at the empty hillside, wondering if he should yell for help. He counted faster, faster, to hurry them up, to bring them to the surface quickly, to drown them quickly - anything rather than the terror of counting on and on into the blue emptiness of the morning. And then, at a hundred and sixty, the water beyond the rock was full of boys blowing like brown whales. They swam back to the shore without a look at him.

He climbed back to the diving rock and sat down, feeling the hot roughness of it under his thighs.* The boys were gathering up their bits of clothing and running off along the shore to another promontory. They were leaving to get away from him. He cried openly, fists in his eyes. There was no one to see him, and he cried himself out.

It seemed to him that a long time had passed, and he swam out to where he could see his mother. Yes, she was still there, a yellow spot under an orange umbrella. He swam back to the big rock, climbed up, and dived into the blue pool among the fanged* and angry boulders. Down he went, until he touched the wall of rock again. But the salt was so painful in his eyes that he could not see.

He carne to the surface, swam to shore and went back to the villa to wait for his mother. Soon she walked slowly up the path, swinging her striped bag, the flushed,* naked arm dangling beside her. `I want some swimming goggles,' he panted, defiant and beseeching.*
She gave him a patient, inquisitive look as she said casually, `Well, of course, darling.' But now, now, now! ¡le must have them this minute., and no other time. He nagged and pestered* until she went with him to a shop. As soon as she had bought the goggles, he grabbed them from her hand as if she were going to claim them for herself, and was off, running down the steep path to the bay.

Jerry swam out to the big barrier rock, adjusted the goggles, and dived. The impact of the water broke the rubber-enclosed vacuum, and the goggles carne loose. He understood that he must swim down to the base of the rock from the surface of the water. He fixed the goggles tight and firm, filled his lungs, and floated, face down, on the water. Now he could see. It was as if he had eyes of a different kind - fish-eyes that showed everything clear and delicate and wavering in the bright water.

Under him, six or seven feet down, was a floor of perfectly clean, shining white sand, rippled firm and hard by the tides. Two greyish shapes steered there, like long, rounded pieces of wood or slate. They were fish. He saw them nose towards each other, poise motionless, make a dart forward, swerve off, and come around again. It was like a water dance. A few inches above them, the water sparkled as if sequins* were dropping through it. Fish again - myriads of minute* fish, the length of his fingernail, were drifting through the water, and in a moment he could feel the innumerable tiny touches of them against his limbs. It was like swimming in flaked silver. The great rock the big boys had swum through rose sheer* out of the white sand, black, tufted lightly with greenish weed. He could see no gap in it. He swam down to its base.

Again and again he rose, took a big chestful of air, and went down. Again and again he groped over the surface of the rock, feeling it, almost hugging it* in the desperate need to find the entrance. And then, once, while he was clinging to the black wall, his knees carne up and he shot his feet out forward and they met no obstacle.* He had found the hole.

He gained the surface, clambered about the stones that littered the barrier rock until he found a big one, and, with this in his arms, let himself down over the side of the rock. He dropped, with the weight, straight to the sandy floor. Clinging tight to the anchor of stone, he lay on his side and looked in under the dark shelf at the place where his feet had gone. He could see the hole. It was an irregular, dark gap, but he could not see deep into it. He let go of his anchor,* clung with his hands to the edges of the hole, and tried to push himself in.

He got his head in, found his shoulders jammed,* moved them in sidewise, and was inside as far as his waist. He could see nothing ahead. Something soft and clammy* touched his mouth, he saw a dark frond* moving against the greyish rock, and panic filled him. He thought of octopuses, of clinging weed. He pushed himself out backward and caught a glimpse, as he retreated, of a harmless tentacle of seaweed drifting in the mouth of the tunnel. But it was enough. He reached the sunlight, swam to shore, and lay on the diving rock. ¡le looked down into the blue well of water. He knew he must find his way through that cave, or hole, or tunnel, and out the other side.

First, he thought, he must learn to control his breathing. He let himself down into the water with another big stone in his arms, so that he could lie effortlessly on the bottom of the sea. He counted. One, two, three. He counted steadily. He could hear the movement of blood in his chest. Fifty-one, fifty-two . . . . His chest was hurting. He let go of the rock and went up into the air. He saw that the sun was low. He rushed to the villa and found his mother at her supper. She said only `Did you enjoy yourself?' and he said `Yes.'
All night, the boy dreamed of the water-filled cave in the rock, and as soon as breakfast was over he went to the hay.

That night, his nose bled badly. For hours he had been underwater, learning to hold his breath, and now he felt weak and dizzy. His mother said, 'I shouldn't overdo things, darling, if I were you.'

That day and the next, Jerry exercised his lungs as if everything, the whole of his life, all that he would become, depended upon it. And again his nose bled at night, and his mother insisted on his coming with her the next day. It was a torment to him to waste a day of his careful self-training, but he stayed with her on that other beach, which now seemed a place for small children, a place where his mother might lie safe in the sun. It was not his beach. He did not ask for permission, on the following day, to go to his beach. He went, before his mother could consider the complicated rights and wrongs of the matter. A day's rest, he discovered, had improved his count by ten. The big boys had made the passage while he counted a hundred and sixty. lie had been counting fast, in his fright. Probably now, if he tried, he could get through that long tunnel, but he was not going to try yet. A curious, most unchildlike persistence, a controlled impatience, made him wait. In the meantime, he lay underwater on the white sand, littered now by stones he had brought down from the upper air, and studied the entrance to the tunnel. He knew every jut and corner of it, as far as it was possible to see. It was as if he already felt its sharpness about his shoulders.

He sat by the clock in the villa, when his mother was not near, and checked his time. He was incredulous and then proud to find he could hold his breath without strain for two minutes. The words 'two minutes', authorized by the clock, brought the adventure that was so necessary to him close.

In another four days, his mother said casually one morning, they must go home. On the day before they left, he would do it. He would do it if it killed him, he said defiantly to himself. But two days before they were to leave - a day of triumph when he increased his count by fifteen - his nose bled so badly that he turned dizzy and had to lie limply over the big rock like a bit of seaweed, watching the thick red blood flow on to the rock and trickle slowly down to the sea. He was frightened. Supposing he turned dizzy in the tunnel? Supposing he died there, trapped? Supposing - his head went around, in the hot sun, and he almost gave up. He thought he would return to the house and lie down, and next summer, perhaps, when he had another year's growth in him - then he would go through the hole.

But even after he had made the decision, or thought he had, he found himself sitting up on the rock and looking down into the water, and he knew that now, this moment when his nose had only just stopped bleeding, when his head was still sore and throbbing - this was the moment when he would try. If he did not do it now, he never would. He was trembling with fear that he would not go, and he was trembling with horror at that long, long tunnel under the rock, under the sea. Even in the open sunlight, the barrier rock seemed very wide and very heavy; tons of rock pressed down on where he would go. If he died there, he would lie until one day - perhaps not before next year - those big boys would swim into it and find it blocked.

He put on his goggles, fitted them tight, tested the vacuum. His hands were shaking. Then he chose the biggest stone he could carry and slipped over the edge of the rock until half of him was in the cool, enclosing water and half in the hot sun. He looked up once at the empty sky, filled his lungs once, twice, and then sank fast to the bottom with the stone. He let it go and began to count. He took the edges of the hole in his hands and drew himself into it, wriggling* his shoulders in sidewise as he remembered he must, kicking himself along with his feet.

Soon he was clear inside. He was in a small rock-bound* hole filled with yellowish-grey water. The water was pushing him up against the roof. The roof was sharp and pained his back. He pulled himself along with his hands - fast, fast - and used his legs as levers. His head knocked against something: a sharp pain dizzied him. Fifty, fifty-one, fifty-two . . . . He was without light, and the water seemed to press upon him with the weight of rock. Seventy-one, seventy-two . . . . There was no strain on his lungs.* He felt like an inflated balloon, his lungs were so light and easy, but his head was pulsing.*

He was being continually pressed against the sharp roof, which felt slimy* as well as sharp. Again he thought of octopuses, and wondered if the tunnel might be filled with weed that could tangle* him. He gave himself a panicky,* convulsive kick forward, ducked his head, and swam. His feet and hands moved freely, as if in open water. The hole must have widened out. 13e thought he must be swimming fast, and he was frightened of banging his head if the tunnel narrowed.

A hundred, a hundred and one. . . The water paled.* Victory filled him. His lungs were beginning to hurt. A few more strokes and he would be out. He was counting wildly; he said a hundred and fifteen, and then, a long time later, a hundred and fifteen again. The water was a clear jewel-Breen all around him. Then he saw, above his head, a crack running up through the rock. Sunlight was falling through it, showing the clean dark rock of the tunnel, a single mussel shell, and darkness ahead.

He was at the end of what he could do. He looked up at the crack as if it were filled with air and not water, as if he could put his mouth to it to draw in air. A hundred and fifteen, he heard himself say inside his head - but he had said that long ago. He must go on into the blackness ahead, or he would drown. His head was swelling, his lungs cracking. A hundred and fifteen, a hundred and fifteen pounded* through his head, and he feebly* clutched at rocks in the dark, pulling himself forward, leaving the brief space of sunlit water behind. He felt he was dying. He was no longer quite conscious. He struggled on in the darkness between lapses into unconsciousness. An immense, swelling* pain filled his head, and then the darkness cracked with an explosion of green light. His hands, grooving forward, met nothing, and his feet, kicking back, propelled him out into the open sea.

He drifted to the surface, his face turned up to the air. He was gasping like a fish. He felt he would sink now and drown; he could not swim the few feet back to the rock. Then he was clutching it and pulling himself up on it. He lay face down, gasping. He could see nothing but a red-veined, clotted dark. His eyes must have burst, he thought; they were full of blood. He tore off his goggles and a gout of blood went into the sea. His nose was bleeding, and the blood had filled the goggles.

He scooped up handfuls of water from the cool, salty sea, to splash on his face, and did not know whether it was blood or salt water he tasted. After a time, his heart quieted, his eyes cleared, and he sat up. He could see nothing but a red-veined, clotted dark. His eyes must have burst, he thought; they were full of blood. He tore off his goggles and a gout of blood went into the sea. His nose was bleeding, and the blood had filled the goggles.

In a short while, Jerry swam to shore and climbed slowly up the path to the villa. He flung* himself on his bed and slept, waking at the sound of feet on the path outside. His mother was coming back. He rushed to the bathroom, thinking she must not see his face with bloodstains, or tearstains, on it. He came out of the bathroom and met her as she walked into the villa, smiling, her eyes lighting up. `Have a nice morning?` she asked, laying her head on his warm brown shoulder a moment.
'Oh, yes, thank you,' he said.
'You look a bit pale.' And then, sharp and anxious. 'How did you bang your head?'
'Oh, just banged it,' he told her.
She looked at him closely. He was strained.* His eyes were glazed-looking. She was worried. And then she said to herself, 'Oh, don't fuss! Nothing can happen. He can swim like a fish.'
They sat down to lunch together.
'Mummy,' he said, 'I can stay under water for two minutes three minutes, at least.' It carne bursting out of him.
'Can you, darling?' she said. 'Well, I shouldn't overdo it. I don't think you ought to swim any more today.'
She was ready for a battle of wills, but he gave in at once. It was no longer of the least importance to go to the bay.

Glossary
The meanings given below are those which the words and phrases have as they occur in the story.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Definition</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>bay: part of the coast where the land forms a semi-circle around the sea.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>contrition: feeling sorry because he had not done what he felt was the right thing.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>unfailing impulse of contrition: he always felt like that in this kind of situation.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>devotion: loving care.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>promontories and inlets: fingers of land sticking out into the sea and the small areas of water between them.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>cape: like a promontory.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>at a stone's throw: (idiom.) he stayed a short distance away from them.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>craving: a very strong feeling of need.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>supplication: asking very seriously for something from more powerful people.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>poised: stood very still and carefully balanced.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>groping: feeling for something with their hands.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>school: group (usually, a large group of fish).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>stinging: the water hurt his eyes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>feat: brave and difficult action.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>Bonjour! etc.: (French) Hello! Thank you! Goodbye! Sir! Sir! 6 waggled: moved quickly up and down.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
bis thighs: the upper parts of his legs.
6 fanged: tooth-shaped.
6 flushed: pink.
6 defiant and beseeching: he didn't want his mother to have power over him but he also very much wanted her help.
7 nagged and pestered: kept on and on asking.
7 sequins: small bright decorations used on dresses.
7 minute: very small.
7 sheer: smooth and straight up; vertical.
7 hugging it: holding it against him with his arms.
7 obstacle: obstruction; something in the way.
8 anchor: the rock he used to keep him in the right place.
8 jammed: fixed so he couldn't move them.
8 clammy: cold and wet.
8 frond: long, thin piece of seaweed.
8 dizzy: as if his head were turning round.
8 torment: terrible pain and suffering.
9 incredulous: didn't believe it could be true.
9 throbbing: the feeling of blood pumping.
10 wriggling: making small movements like a worm.
10 rock-bound: enclosed by rocks.
10 no strain on bis lungs: he didn't find holding his breath difficult.
10 pulsing: similar to throbbing.
10 slimy: wet and slippery.
10 tangle: get caught and wrapped around.
10 panicky: with great fear and the need to escape danger.
10 paled: got lighter in colour.
11 pounded: throbbed strongly.
11 feebly: weakly, without strength.
11 swelling: growing.
11 flung: threw.
12 was strained: was tired from using a lot of nervous energy, but not relaxed.
Questions

1. Read the first paragraph of the story to see how, in its description of the two people and of the surroundings, it sums up the whole situation of Jerry and raises our interest in what is to follow. (p. 3)
   (a) Which two areas of the coast does Jerry look at when he stands on the path?
   (b) Jerry connects his mother with the crowded beach. What is the contrast between these associations and the rocky bay?
   (c) Why does his mother feel impatient with Jerry and worry over things he might secretly be thinking about?
   (d) Why does he feel sorry for staying behind?
   (e) When he runs to catch up with his mother, what does he look back at and why does he think about it all morning?

2. What do the local boys mean to Jerry? Why is it so important to him that he should try to join them and what is the event that separates him from them so that he cries? (pp. 4-6)
   (a) What do the local boys look like and what sort of impression do you get of them from their behaviour?
   (b) Why was Jerry happy when he first joined them and how did he feel when he began diving with them?
   (c) What do the local boys do that Jerry fails to do?
   (d) How do they react when Jerry starts to behave in a silly way (like a foolish dog)?
   (e) Why does he feel 'hot shame' when they look at him?
   (f) Does Jerry stay with the local boys and join them as a friend?

3. How does Jerry prepare for his big test? Which things encourage him and which things might give him good reason to forget the whole idea?
   (a) What does he feel when he finds the entrance to the tunnel and looks into it? (p. 8)
   (b) What does he do about his breathing? (p. 8, p. 9)
   (c) What does he do while he is lying underwater on the sand? (p. 8)
   (d) What happens during the night following Jerry's first day of training and again two days before he is due to go home? (p. 8, p. 9)
   (e) Why does this make him afraid of what might happen in the tunnel? (p. 9)
   (f) Why does he feel he has to get through the tunnel? (p. 9)

4. Jerry's mother lays her head on his 'warm brown shoulder'
(p. 12). This is the first time it is mentioned that Jerry is brown. Why is it mentioned at the end of the story?

(a) In the first paragraph of the story we are told about the mother's complexion. What does she mean to Jerry and how does he see himself in relation to her?

(b) What colour are the local boys and what importance do they have for him? (pp. 4-6)

(c) When Jerry's mother lays her head on his shoulder, does she act as she would to a child?

(d) When she suggests that he looks pale, does Jerry accept her anxiety?

(e) Jerry may look pale, but does he feel pale and helpless any more? Which group of people does he belong to now? Are these people children?

5. 'Water surged into his mouth; he choked, sank, carne up.'

(p. 6) How is this a summing up of Jerry's experience of life and his way of dealing with it?

(a) What will Jerry prove to himself if he succeeds in swimming through the tunnel?

(b) Is Jerry's meeting with the local boys a success? (p. 5)

(c) Does he have to face unpleasant things in order to get through the tunnel?

(d) There is an idiom in English for talking about a situation where there is only one chance or way of surviving: 'If I don't do this, I'm sunk.' How will Jerry feel if he cannot find the courage to swim through the tunnel?

(e) Does he experience fear? Does he let himself be controlled by his fear? (See especially his experience when half-way through the tunnel.) (p. 10)

6. Jerry's mother seems very casual and even uninterested in him and what he does. Do you think she is really casual and uninterested?

(a) What are her feelings in the first paragraph of the story?

(b) Has Jerry any brothers or sisters and is his father alive? (p. 4) How might this affect his mother's attitude to him?

(c) Why does Jerry's mother think she must be careful? (p. 3)

(d) When Jerry asks for the goggles, how does his mother reply to him and how does she look at him? What does the contrast show about her attitude? (pp. 6-7)

(e) When Jerry returns after his first day of preparation, his mother says only 'Did you enjoy yourself?' Why does she not show more interest? (p. 8)

(f) Look at the conversation between them at the end of the story and compare the mother's words with what we are told about her thoughts and feelings.

7. Did you find the account of Jerry's journey through the tunnel exciting? What is it about stories like this that a lot of people find fascinating? Can you think of other stories or films where people have to make similar difficult or dangerous journeys?